

This artwork "Oh you found me" is a piece I worked on fully digital. Very basic idea of this work is ominous because the project I was working on is "ominous landscape", and since I like drawing Anime-type characters, I wanted to use my own character to create ominous landscapes. The idea of this character is that children that seem innocent become violent and start killing people. And after I finished developing and drew the character, I used a freelight picture as the background.

For the strength of this work, I would say I took the time to think color carefully. I use a color changing system in the digital drawing software and change hue, value, intensity for each element (like hair, skin, cloth and etc) to make the character fit to the background. I also change the background darker mostly, and lighter the light place to exaggerate brightness.

The meaning of this work for me is just a step. I don't believe this work and every other work that I've created is not good enough, in other words, all work that I made is just a practice to be a better artist. By creating this work, I was inspired by the horror game called "Little Nightmare" designed by Dennis Talajic. I tried to turn the world of this game to modern and realistic.
